

What is it?

This was found in a pit earlier this week. We now think that the pit may have been for burials but it is much larger than any of the others. It has produced some of the most exotic finds.

It is made of bone or ivory. The wear marks suggest that it may have had four rods or strings passing through it and that either these were moved backwards and forwards through the object or the bone object was moved backwards and forwards along them. Something from a musical instrument perhaps? Part of a weaving frame?

If you think you know what it might be tell one of the tour guides.
